

J. PAUL BREAKSTONE

He could've seen his work hang in the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia...
but Melanoma besieged him at 46.

He would've seen his children develop worthwhile careers...
but Melanoma killed him at 47.

He should've walked his children down the aisle at their weddings...
but Melanoma killed him at 47.

He could've taken delight in, played with, and guided wonderful grandchildren...
but Melanoma killed him at 47.

He would've continued as a major presence in his mother's long, healthy, happy life...
but Melanoma killed him at 47.

He should've been here for family, friendship, photography, insurance...
but Melanoma killed him at 47.

He could've, would've should've...
avoided the midday sun, used protective sunscreen and clothing, had regular dermatological checkups...
but we didn't know.

NOW WE KNOW! Melanoma, with early detection and treatment, is greatly manageable.

Trude Breakstone Berzon Ron and Barbra Kaplan
Steve Kaplan and Todd Bingham Dana, Eric, Jen, and Josh Lieberman
Wendy, Sam, and Carson Ladd Michael, Jaime, and Hudson Breakstone